Your Honor,

I would like to tell you about my husband. My husband attended a Korean Air Force Academy and served the country (Korea) for 16 years. My husband chose to quit the military, be honorably discharged to become a minister. The reason why he made that decision was because he was suffering from sin, but then he was able to meet God and be free from sin. I respect and honor my husband because he left his place as the Lieutenant Commander and left his guaranteed life to serve God, serve the gospel and walk his path as a minister. He has been ministering for 14 years and has guided countless youths to get on the right path. He also does many voluntary works such as going to Haiti every year and follows along to help out during the Christmas Cantata tour around the country.

We got married in the year of 1992 and got our first son in November 1997. During the four years before my first son was born I had 5 miscarriages. The times of my miscarriages were the hardest times of my life. There were times when I hated God and resented him. Then in the year of 1995, I received salvation and God gave me a son. Joo is not just a son. Joo is the first gift that God has given me. As much as the pain I had having miscarriages, I was that much more happy when I bore my son. I believe that if I were the one to raise my son, I wouldn't have been able to raise him this well. It was God and the church who raised him. I believe that my sons, even the two after Joo will become the servants of God.

Coming from Korea to minister in America there were many hard times for us. We had many difficulties and struggles, one of them being the language. When we couldn't speak English well, my son would try his best to interpret and help us. Whatever we did, he always tried to help. There was a time when thing got too difficult for me and I no longer wanted to minister. I asked my son if we should quit and make lots of money to do everything that he wants, but my son said that being a minister and being the wife of the minister is the best job in the world and gave me a thumb's up. That is how I was able to change my heart and keep ministering. Whatever we did he wanted and tried to help us. Even this incident he was trying to help, but the deeds were wrong and I ask for your forgiveness.

My husband and son didn't have any bad intentions when hitting Seng. It was out of greed of wanting to make him a better person. We were like family. Since both of his parents worked, my husband would go and pick him up every day after school and bring him to church. We would eat dinner together as a family. We wanted him to be better and be set to the right mind. It was out of discipline not rage. If it were any other child they would've never set a finger on them, but because we were like family. My son and husband did wrong. I beg that you will please consider their future and make favorable arrangements for them.

Sincerely,
